In the wake of his boyfriend's departure from his life, Adam discovers the unthinkable: his own reflection has taken on a mind of its own. Not only has it been communicating with him via written messages held up in the glass, it has also hijacked his computer and cell phone, sending communications Adam would rather weren't sent. Can Adam convince his reflection that he should work on patching things up with his distant boyfriend, or will his reflection succeed in driving him in another direction entirely?
